During his 25 years experience in the media and publishing industry, Mike Anderson developed significant and varied operational experience and a reputation for success. A particular specialist in national newspapers, where the core focus has been to retain a competitive advantage, he has successfully driven businesses, been the creator of new brands, managed start ups and re-positioned transitions, whilst always managing tight budgets and profit expectation. His versatility and ability to interpret brand values, along with his passionate and instinctive management style, took him to the top as Managing Director of The Sun, The News of the World, The Evening Standard and Metro working alongside some of the most notable names in the media world.

In these roles, Mike's absolute understanding of all the relevant competitive environments enabled him to respond to a fast and constantly changing market with innovative management concepts and an absolute strategic belief.

In the late nineties, Mike also worked on the management teams of two award winning media agencies – CIA MediaEdge and PHD where his natural leadership and dynamism translated into creative and positive working relationships with clients across the world.

He has extensively visited and studied the working practices of various award-winning companies including Apple Computers, Cisco Systems, SRI and the Delancey Street Foundation.

In October 2009, Mike Anderson set up Frank, a strategic business and communications consultancy where he mentors businesses to maximise their potential for growth and success, using inspirational and unique techniques. He was immediately retained by News International.

Mike lives in London with three daughters and has an all round enthusiasm for life!

He is a polished and charismatic public speaker.
